About People And Things

It seems that he attended some kind of a social function at the Kinston school house. During his absence, some miscreant liberally sprinkled his car seat with sandspurs. After the entertainment, Harold sat down quite briskly, and the sensation of a hundred needle points caused him to arise even more abruptly. The highly effective sandspurs had gotten such a hold on the person of Weat Elba's popular grocery salesman that the cushion came with him and it required strenuous pulling to separate it from his anatomy. In spite of the hardships that he has been contending with on his frequent trips, Harold says he is in love with the place and intends to continue his visits whenever opportunity offers.

FINE HAY CROP—Peanut growers all over the county have been taking full auvantage of the fine weather conditions that have prevailed for the past two weeks. A large part of the crop has been gathered and under unusually favorable conditions. Oil growers say they have never seen peanuts yield more readily when they go into the stack in their lives. The cool nights and subsequent hot, sunshiny days are just what are needed to make Coffee County peanuts big enough grade as No. 1 and the hay rate almost what the usually higher grades, such as Bald, clover, timothy, etc. It is predicted that the peanut market will start off around 40 per ton for peanuts and $60 for fodder. This is considerably higher than last season, but prices paid Coffee County peanut growers realizing handsome returns from this year's crop.

STAPLE COTTON SHOULD BRING PREMIUM PRICE

AUBURN, Ala.—Producers will benefit by the announcement that for the price paid for middling seventh-eighths in cotton in the basis for the price adjustment payment will compensate them for the better grade and staple length, say AAA officials in urging cotton producers to insist upon buyers paying premium on cotton above average in grade and staple length.

"For example," they say, "the average price for white middling seventh-eighths inch cotton in the ten markets on September 20 was 10.60 cents per pound. If a producer sold on that day the government will pay him a difference of 1.40 cents per pound.

He would receive this payment of 1.40 cents per pound even if he sold premium cotton on Sept. 20 which brought him 12 cents a pound or more."

As these words are written, the Chicago Cubs, winners of the National League pennant, and the Detroit Tigers, American League champions, are squaring off in battle array at Detroit, in baseball's annual classic. The two clubs seem to be unusually evenly matched, although the Cubs' phenomenal record of winning 21 straight victories against the stiffest opposition in the National League stamps them as being "hot." And none of their admirers contend that they will go right on winning. However, Gordon Conner predicts that the Cubs will not win more than one game against Mickey Cochrane's mighty array, and this should be taken with a grain of salt, as perhaps "Bud" may be unduly prejudiced against the Cubs for manhandling his favorite St. Louis Cardinals in such an unfriendly manner. A peculiar situation exists among Elba baseball fans with regard to the world series. Almost to a man, Cub admirers were also Tiger supporters to win the American League pennant. Now that both of their favorites have won the championship of their respective leagues and are opposed to each other in the world series, it is interesting to note the way in which team they will switch their affections to. Gordon Conner lost out in both instances. Louis in the National and the New York Yankees in the American. My prediction is that it will be a closely contested series, with Chicago winning out in six or seven games.

CHURCH CENSUS—As a result of a church and Sunday-School census just completed by the ladies of the Elba Methodist Church, an enlistment campaign has been supplemented by Rev. W. J. Hughes and Mr. W. J. Bullard, it is shown that there are plenty of people in and around Elba who profess to be interested in religious matters to fill the three white church buildings at every service. As all the buildings are easily accessible, there must be something radically wrong somewhere. It is up to us Methodist people who are interested in the spiritual welfare of our people to solve this serious problem. There is plenty of food for thought.

FARMERS ARE RECEIVING BETTER PLANTING SEED

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—Farmers throughout Alabama are receiving a more superior grade of planting seed than ever before, Director M. L. Duggan, Jr. says R. J. Goode, commissioner of agriculture, in reporting that the Farm Seed Service laboratory in finding fewer obnoxious weed seed than at any time during the history of seed testing work.

Commissioner Goode also states that in most cases the analysis tag on the seed carries the correct information about purity and germination. Farmers have reached had an idea that seed must test 98 per cent pure and 90 per cent germination to be sold, he said. "In many cases these figures were found on the tags without testing for their correctness. It is now an exception to the former rule to receive mislabeled seed on the market."

COTTON CROP VALUE MORE THAN DOUBLED

AUBURN, Ala.—Alabama cotton farmers received two and one-half times as much for their 1934 cotton crop as they did for the crop of 1932, the year before the AAA program started.

Statistics released by Dr. L. N. Duncan, director of the Extension Service, reveal that the total farm value of lint and seed cotton in Alabama in 1932 was only $37,402,000 compared with a total value of $84,672,686 in 1934.

While the Alabama crop was more than doubling, the value of the cotton crop in the South increased from $483,887,000 in 1932 to $881,235,272.67 in 1934.

COTTON FOR HOUSEHOLD USE EXEMPT FROM TAX

AUBURN, Ala.—Cotton producers may have 110 pounds of lint cotton ginned for domestic use in their households without payment of the cotton ginning tax. "The 110 pounds of cotton is to be used only in the producer's household and is in addition to the producer's tax-exempt allotment of cotton under the Bankhead Act," says Dan Hamilton, county AAA administration.

Producers who desire to avail themselves of this exemption should hold back from the gin enough seed cotton to produce the lint which they desire to use in their household and secure from the county agent an application form for exemption before taking such seed cotton to the gin.

TO MAKE A LONG TALE SHORT

A drummer asked us yesterday if we had heard of Two-In-One shoe polish and Three-In-One oil, and we admitted we had. "Now if Two-In-One is shoe polish and Three-In-One is oil, what is Four 'n' One?" We gave it up. "Isn't it five?" he said, and we took the count. But we got up, and went merrily on getting out a valve grinding job that we were busy on when the drummer "butted in."

Resettlement Program Designed To Enable Deserving Farmers To Get Good Start

The purpose of the Resettlement program now getting under way as to create new opportunities in rural areas, according to Philip Weltner, Director of Rural Resettlement in the four States, Alabama, Florida, Georgia and South Carolina.

"This is not relief work in any temporary sense," Mr. Weltner explained. "It is the start of a long-term policy designed to increase the number of home-owning farmers, and to make more intelligent use of land. The program should have been in operation years ago, but the public did not become aware of the critical condition in rural areas until the depression focused attention upon the weaker links in our national economic chain.

"Any observant person who travels over the Southeast can see what is happening," Mr. Weltner continued. "The rivers are red and sluggish because they are so heavily loaded with the good earth of the uplands, being ferried out to sea. In many areas men still are tilling land so eroded and worn or so depleted in fertility that they stand no chance to earn a decent living. Little schools and churches in tenants hills, unable to cope with conditions, and blighted economically by any agency strong enough to effect constructive change, have had no choice but to blow their very hearts out in weary and unrewarded attempts to get from their impoverished soils what those soils do not have.

"Yet," said Mr. Weltner, "there is plenty of good land in every state. One of the big jobs of Resettlement Administration is to get farmers onto the good land nearest to them and turn the poor land back to trees, a crop which will never ever it is best suited to produce. This is true land economy. It is common sense."

Fifty years ago, Mr. Weltner pointed out, there were no three farmers in the cotton states owning their places. Now more than half of all farmers in those states are tenants. In Georgia, South Carolina and Alabama tenantry mounts to more than 60 per cent. In those years tenantry has been increasing, and among the white farmers more than among the negro farmers.

"To sit down and permit this trend to continue," insists Mr. Weltner, "is to sit down and await disaster. Something must be done, and done now. The time has gone when we can squander natural resources, manner and fertility, and get by with it. Our grandfathers had often our fathers had plenty of frontier space left. The world was short of everything they produced, and bought every cent from them. They could, and did, wear out lands, ravage forests, then move to new locations. We cannot do that today with the unplanned ease of former year. But we can create new opportunities by using intelligence and scientific knowledge, in place of west-bound transportation that formerly sufficed."

The first step, Mr. Weltner explained, is to supply the needier and worthier, farm families with equipment and supplies they must have to earn an immediate living. This is done by extending loans, which must be repaid to the Resettlement Administration. The second step—and this is a permanent phase of the work—is to select and keep on selecting from the tenants and other non-owning persons with farm experience, those families which seem most likely to succeed, and through a financing plan make it possible for them to acquire homes of their own on land fitted for the crops they will produce. Loans for the purchase of land and the erection of decent houses will, of course, have to be paid on fair and sensible terms.

"We have no intention," Mr. Weltner added, "of making loans in random, reckless fashion. We know, of course, that every person is not competent to buy, pay for and maintain a farm home. Our business is to sift out those tens of thousands of strong, competent, honest non-owners who are most anxiety to become permanently possessed of their lands and buildings. Every increase among the non-owning farmers and among every owner else is an increase in wealth, in social solidarity, and in the sum total of human happiness. There are in Alabama today, and in all other states, thousands of non-owners eager for a good land. Down at Irwinville, Ga., we have a Resettlement project in operation, the local manager has time and again noted the settlers there leaning on their plows in the dark of the morning, awaiting the coming of daylight to begin work. Those settlers see they have a new chance, and they aim to make the most of it. Of the forty-two families at the Irwinville project, at least forty have demonstrated their ere are to make good. The same story is being found in many other localities. Tenants, defeated for years by conditions for which neither tenants nor landlords are responsible, see a new hope and some of them spring to grasp it. The aim of Resettlement Administration is to be able for those who desire better things, greater security, to obtain better farms and more decent homes. But we approach the matter practically, not sentimentally."

Production of crops, already over-produced, will not, in Mr. Weltner's opinion, be increased by the Resettlement program. Tenant beneficiaries of the program now are forced to grow cotton or tobacco or other money crops, but once upon their own places they will be able to pay more attention to basic food and feed crops production for consumption on the premises.

"But," concluded Mr. Weltner, "the Resettlement Administration is not concerned wholly with the non-owners. Loans are extended to owners, also, under the Bankhead Act. Adjustment activities, a large part of the Resettlement work, are seeking to compose difference between farm debtors and their creditors. Where farm mortgage interests and liens have been written down, interest rates reduced, postponements effected, or by whatever means necessary, the farmer's place has been saved for him, without unfairness to the creditor.

"The Resettlement program is a huge undertaking: to protect competent land owners in their possessions, to make it possible for competent non-owners to get possessions, and to bring about intelligent scientific use of land. Any one part we face a big job. So can any one see that we face a job that is essential to state and national security."

AGENT SCHEDULES MEETINGS TO EXPLAIN CANE PROGRAM

The 1935 syrup program was designed to add about $2,500,000 to the income of syrup producers in Alabama, Mississippi, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Arkansas and South Carolina. All Coffee County producers, who are eligible, will be given a chance to cooperate in the program in a few days.

Before being eligible to share in the benefits of the program, a farmer must have produced sugar cane for syrup in 1934. He also must have produced and sold or have on hand to be sold at least 200 gallons of syrup from the 1934 crop. Or he must have paid the processing tax on at least 100 gallons of syrup sold from the 1934 crop.

Farmers are not required to reduce their production below that of 1934 but agree to adjust their 1935 production so that the production and syrup sales will not exceed those in 1934. This is the main compliance requirement in the syrup program.

Benefit payments will be made on the 1934 crop as well as the 1935 crop. These payments are made in return for cooperation in the 1935 crop.

The 1934 payment will be paid first. Ten cents a gallon will be paid for all syrup over 100 gallons produced from the acreage in the crop, provided he sold 200 gallons or paid the processing tax on at least 100 gallons.

The 1935 benefit payments will be dependent on the price of syrup during the marketing year. These payments will be made on 83 per cent of the 1935 production of each farmer.

The administrative expenses of the program within the county according to the secretary, will be met by subtracting 3 of 1 per gallon on the amount of syrup on which payments are to be made in 1935.

The Acent has arranged a series of meetings to explain the program within the county. The meetings will be held as follows:

Zion Chapel Church, Friday, October 11, 8 a.m.

Elba Court House, Friday, October 11, 2 p.m.

Victoria, Saturday, October 12, 8 a.m.

EDUCATIONAL MEETING TO BE HELD IN ENTERPRISE

To School Officials of District Number 3:

On Saturday, October 19, the Alabama Education Association of the Alabama Congress of Parents and Teachers, and the State Department of Education will hold a joint meeting in your district, District No. 3, at Enterprise. The meeting will begin at 10:00 o'clock with O. E. Tompkins, President of that body, presiding. Plan now to attend this meeting and to bring a goodly number of your teachers with you.

The recent session of the Legislature enacted into law, practically with no opposition, certain measures concerning schools of far-reaching importance. The appropriation of more than eleven million dollars to education with a dissenting vote is, perhaps unprecedented.

During the morning session Superintendent Keller and President Munro will discuss the improved public school situation in Alabama together with some of the problems of the teaching profession that are the result of this recent legislation.

During the afternoon session an educational "Grand Jury" will be conducted by Mrs. James Pitts Hill, President of the Alabama Congress of Parents and Teachers. This will be followed by an open forum on certain acute problems relating to teacher welfare in the state. You and your teachers can well lose by not attending the meeting and participating in this program.

Hoping to have the pleasure of seeing you in Enterprise, I am

Cordially yours,

FRANK L. GROVE,
Secretary.

About People and Things

By C. B. McDowell

WHO CAN BEAT IT?—Mr. E. S. Tucker, who lives on Stella Route, Florala, is visiting relatives in Elba and vicinity this week. Mr. Tucker says he reads this column with much interest and the contest between Mr. and Mrs. V. H. Farris and Mr. and Mrs. John W. Davis, won by the latter couple, showing that they have been enjoying married life for 37 years, reminds him that perhaps he and his two brothers may claim the greatest combined age of any three brothers residing in this section of Alabama. E. P. Tucker, Elba, Dec. 3, was born September 7, 1852. E. S. Tucker was born August 10, 1855. W. H. Tucker of Elba was born Jan. 6, 1859, making their combined ages about 240 years. All are now in fairly good health, although E. S. reports that he has only recently recovered from a three-months siege of complicated fever that came near causing his death.

As a result of his experience he says he saw things that he hopes never to witness again and warns all to take a worthy successor or of such line-crashers as John Knight and John Will Reddoch of formers. Jake Crook gave one of the finest exhibitions of consistant tackling ever seen on an Elba field. He also snagged one of the two passes that Elba completed. The outstanding tackle of the day was made by "Shelk" Miller. One of Brantley's giant ballcarriers had shaken off three other tacklers and bid fair to go places when "Shelk" broke through and smeared him for a five-yard loss. It was a beautiful play. Although little Charles Lindsey, Elba safety man, was hobbling about on a bad ankle, he forgot about his crippled condition when plays became strenuous and performed nobly. It is said that when Ferrell Young, who was pitted against 210-pound Rowell at guard, first sized up his mountous opponent he had a weak feeling in the pit of his stomach and the vicinity of his knees, but as luck would have it, on the very first play Ferrell made a perfect tackle, bringing 210 pounds of beef to earth with a thud that caused a miniature earthquake. From then on Ferrell's nervousness was a thing of the past and nothing could get by him.

To show how hard Elba's midgets were fighting, no less than 12 Brantley downs were played within a few yards of the Elba 20-yard line, but on every occasion the line held like the proverbial stone wall and the Brantleyites were unable to make any headway. The climax was reached in the final minutes of the game when Brantley's huge monsters with a lot of green material and has molded a football aggregation that gives promise of making a creditable showing against teams that, earlier in the season, were expected to use Elba as practice door-mats. Friday's game stamped Coach Crigler's eleven as one that opposing teams will have to reckon with. Local fans are convinced that although the scratching Tigers may be defeated by some of the more experienced machines to be met this season, the boys will put on everything they've got and go down fighting. That's what the fans like, and so long as the team's boys do that, Elba fans will be behind them.

* * * * *

PEP TEAM—No little credit for Elba's Tiger football team's great showing in last Friday's game against Brantley is due to the very efficient and noisy pep team which lent whole-hearted encouragement all during the game. One

REAL ACCIDENTS FEW

What are generally classed as accidents are in most cases not accidents at all, but merely the results of pure carelessness or recklessness, according to a noted surgeon, who declares that really unpreventable accidents are very few.

The greater number of accidents are caused by failure to keep in mind the consequences of a slight mistake in judgment, or in "taking a chance" even when the danger is realized.

Of 35,000 deaths in the United States through automobile accidents each year, it is safe to say that 90 per cent could be laid to someone's disregard of ordinary safety precautions. The worst feature of this is that a reckless driver not only endangers himself but also trifles with the lives of others.

In accidents due to fire, the same principle holds good. Everyone knows how easily the careless throwing of a lighted match may start a disastrous fire, yet millions of lighted matches, cigar and cigarettes stubs are cast aside with little or no caution. Practically every fire that occurs is caused by stupid carelessness.

Accidents do happen, of course, under circumstances wherein no one appears to be at fault, but these are in the minority. Generally accidents are caused by ignorance, carelessness or wanton disregard of consequences.

STORY OF THE BIBLE

AS THESE chapters have appeared in serial form a surgeon of national reputation sent this request:

"Before you finish your story of The Book, please be sure to give us the answer to these two questions:

1. How were the books of the Bible gathered into a collection and distinguished as a group by themselves? Who selected them and how do we know that the right ones were selected?

2. By what means were these chosen books preserved and handed down? Who decided that they ought to be translated into modern languages and who did the translating?

Let us deal first with the Old Testament. It would be well to point out if we could say that some one group of men, meeting in Jerusalem about 400 B.C., selected the books which we now have and certified for all time that these and no others should be the Old Testament. But such is not the case. As the writing of these books was an evolution, so was their selection. Largely, they have been preserved to us by the process known as the survival of the fittest.

The ancient Hebrews held many of their books in high regard, of which nearly thirty are referred to in the Old Testament. Twenty-four of these are sunk beyond all knowledge. The story about the sun standing still for Joshua is to be a part of the Bible.

The Story of the Constitution
by CALEB JOHNSON

VII—THE SUPREME COURT AND ITS POWER

The need for a Federal Judiciary was apparent to the delegates to the Convention of 1787. The earlier attempts at an effective Federation had been hampered by the lack of any court having jurisdiction outside its own State. The Constitution has been kept in mid-channel of the current of events through reasoned interpretation of its intent by the Supreme Court.

In the exercise of its duty to keep the law by the standard of the Constitution, the Supreme Court in the 146 years of existence has passed upon 24,016 public laws enacted by the Congress. In only 77 cases has the Court declared unconstitutional, and 27 of those decisions were unanimous. The Constitution has the Supreme Court throughout its existence has been equal to the emergencies through its interpretations, abreast of the times.

The Supreme Court never acts on its own initiative. It passes only upon cases brought before it by litigants, generally on appeal from the lower courts. And when it decides that a law is unconstitutional its decision is, in effect, a declaration that Congress has tried to do something that runs contrary to the will of the people, as expressed in the document under which Congress, the President and the Court itself derive their powers.

The Supreme Court itself has no power to enforce its decisions. They are, in effect, self-enforcing for they are recognized by every court in the land, Federal or State, and by Congress and the Executive, as the final word on the question at issue. When the Supreme Court declares a law unconstitutional, that law ceases to exist.

How accurately the Supreme Court reflects the changing public sentiment of changing times is indicated by the fact that only once has an amendment to the Constitution resulted directly from an adverse decision by the Court. That is the income tax amendment.

FARMER JONES AND HIS COW PEN

By JUDGE W. M. BRISTOW

The farmers in this section of the state have learned quite a bit during the past 5 years about building soil with such crops as velvet beans, peas, Austrian winter peas and other legumes. These crops are all very beneficial to the land and most of us plant some of them each year. I doubt that we give enough attention to the building of soil by planting such crops but most of us know and appreciate the value of such crops as soil builders. There are other crops which will build up your soil which do not require cultivation. Many of us have overlooked these crops while others of us have never learned the true value of them. There is a weed which grows as a volunteer in most this section, which is known as the beggarlice weed and which is very beneficial to the soil as a soil builder. I'm sure that you know this weed when you see it but I doubt that you have ever considered the weed as a real friend to the farmer of this section.

Most of us destroy these weeds just as we would grass. There are hundreds of farmers in this section who have never tried to protect this weed as it grows in his field. I have also noticed that many fields do not grow this weed, which means that the owner has either destroyed the weed so completely that there are no seeds left on the land or that they never have been any beggarlice weeds in that field. It makes no difference whether or not there have ever been beggarlice in your field if you do not have the seed on your place. You should have this weed on your place and if you do not have it the time for you to get it. The seed are easily obtainable and easily planted. I would suggest that you go to a field where there are large beggarlice weeds and that you strip the seed off the weeds by hand before the frost falls on them. Use a cloth glove and strip the seed off a weed at one stroke if it is not too large. If the weed is large you should take sections instead of the whole weed. Simply grasp the weed with the right hand and allow the stem to slip through your hand as the seed come off. A cloth sack is suitable to place the seed in as you gather them. I would suggest that you secure at least a half sack of seed for each two-horse farm. The seed should be stored away from mice in the tight cover until next summer. I suggest that you plant these seed on your terraces as the terraces are fertile and will grow large weeds the first year. Regardless of where you have planted on the terrace the beggarlice seed should be planted immediately before you plant the crop which is planted on the terrace. I suggest that you scatter the seed on both sides of the row on the top of the terrace and plough them in as you plow that crop. This plan works better with cotton than any other crop as the cotton will not choke the beggarlice weed out. After you have scattered the seed on the terrace and have ploughed the row for the last time you have nothing more to do except to watch the weeds grow. After the first year you will not find it necessary to plant more seed, however it is best to watch for the weeds and protect them in some crops. For instance a cotton or peanut crop with a good stand might choke the weeds out if you should keep the rows perfectly clean until a late date. Peanuts will sometimes choke this weed completely out if they are kept perfectly free of weeds until the vines completely cover the ground. It is mighty easy to learn the weed and then leave them scattered about in your field. The beggarlice weed is our greatest friend if we will only give it a living chance. This weed stores a large quantity of nitrogen in the soil while you are growing other crops. It costs nothing. It no trouble to us, adds valuable nitrogen to our soil, yet many of us do our very best to destroy the last weed on the place. When we destroy this weed we are working against our own best interest. It seems that nature is trying hard to help us out while many of us

STALK DESTRUCTION KILLS BOLL WEEVILS

AUBURN, Ala.—To prevent a heavy infestation in next crop year Alabama cotton growers are being urged to wage a stiff battle against boll weevils this fall.

As soon as the cotton has been picked the growers should cut down all the stalks and plow them under, says Prof. J. M. Robinson, head of the entomology department of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute.

Cutting the stalks deprives the weevils of their food and plowing them under will kill weevils which might otherwise survive the winter.

If the stalks are left to grow until frost, the weevils will approach winter in a healthy, vigorous condition, Robinson added, and they will be able to withstand the cold weather.

THIRTEENTH INSTALLMENT

When Rankin reached the Central Detective Bureau, a special delivery letter had come from the State Hospital for Women. In the process of complications, he had almost forgotten his inquiry to Alberton, Indiana, about the empty medicine bottle he had found in Mrs. Keith's medicine chest, that had once contained pyramidon. Whatever her connection with the hospital, it predated her marriage, and the slender link had appeared relatively insignificant.

Tearing open the envelope, Rankin perused the message. And as he read, his brows slowly wrinkled in astonishment.

Friday, June 9.

Mr. Thomas Rankin
Central Detective Bureau
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania
My Dear Sir:

In reply to your inquiry about a Barbara Keith or Webb who was a patient in this hospital between 1924 and 1928, I would advise you we can locate no record of treating her. Appreciating the importance of your search I have thoroughly questioned our staff of doctors, nurses and matrons without result. Since we serve only inmates, I feel confident that Keith might have served a term in the State Penitentiary for Women at Alderson, but, produced a number of papers from her desk and passed them to Rankin.

"I've collected all the information I could about . . . Ellen Trent," she stated, "in anticipation of your arrival here. Here in all the data we have about her offense and confinement here."

"Thank you, Mrs. Anderson," Rankin returned. "I appreciate your cooperation greatly; it will spare me a good deal of trouble."

Mrs. Anderson indicated the records. "There, you can see for yourself how her points coincide with those of Mrs. Keith's." She placed the prints Rankin brought beside a sheet from the files. "The description tally, too, and these pictures settle it that Ellen Trent and Mrs. Keith were the same person."

Worried, Rankin studied the prison photograph of the woman he had seen only after she died. She did not look a hardened criminal and it bothered Rankin that she should be involved in that sordid existence.

"There's no mistake about her identity, Mrs. Anderson," he agreed.

She tells you here that she was really stated for concealing as well as disposing of stolen goods. The woman read on. "They were found in her rooms, in Fort Wayne. And the fact that she lived there with a man not her husband increased the penalty for a first offense as a moral delinquent. She received a further account of her crimes in this state."

The detective shook his head, perplexed. "That isn't a bit like my impression of Mrs. Keith when I began her term, according to this, on March twentieth, nineteen-seventy-five."

It was in the summer of '28, in Detroit, he recalled from Mortimer Keith's account, that she met her future husband.

"That night, over six years ago," Mrs. Anderson pointed out the dates. "She was sentenced only a few days after she was caught—about March tenth or so; and by pleading guilty, saved the expense and time of a trial. She finished her imprisonment one year later, in March, 1934."

"You say the girl dealt in stolen goods in Fort Wayne, Mrs. Anderson?" Rankin asked the matron. "What made the authorities suspicious of her?"

Mrs. Anderson shrugged. "She didn't do it herself, I suppose," she admitted grudgingly. "I wasn't told how they traced her. The man she shared the apartment with was the actual thief. Found out of a pair—and her sweetheart. When they caught him, they got his address and found her there with some of the loot."

The detective hitched forward. "Then the police know all about her companion?" he asked, eagerly. "Who and where he is—whether he's serving a term now?"

"Yes, his name, in the accounts was Dave Garrett; they had no previous record on him, either." The matron spoke bluntly. "And it's pretty certain what's become of him, Mr. Rankin; you see, he's been six feet under for over six years."

Rankin's features dropped in disappointment. "Dead?" he repeated blankly. "How did that happen? Are you positive of your information?"

"It was in all the papers at the time of his last robbery. It's a long story and I can give you only the main details; the rest you'll have to get from them or the police records in Indianapolis and Fort Wayne. For about a year around 1926, both towns suffered from an epidemic of robberies, to which there were no clews. In this last business the robbers were masked and used a stolen car, which they later abandoned in the country. After the Munson robbery, it was known that two gangsters men were the thieves."

Mrs. Anderson paused to clear her throat.

"Finally, they made an attempt on a shipment of negotiable bonds lodged in the American Express office in Indianapolis," she related. "That was a different matter altogether; they were worth hundreds of thousand dollars, and were guarded by a burglar alarm and by armed men who could shoot straight. It isn't known how the burglars learned of the shipment, because of the guards, it wasn't even put in the company safe, but kept in a suitcase behind the counter."

"I see . . . Anyhow, they pried open a window leading into a back alley at the rear of the building and set off the alarm. The guards, warned of their approach, waited for them to reach the main storeroom before they opened fire. Both men were fairly trapped, but only one returned the fire; no gun was found on the body of the man who was more than twenty-one—when they examined his body afterward."

"That's all right, tonight," Rankin commented gruffly. "What about the other chap?"

"He made a getaway, though of course without the bonds," the matron replied. "Garrett had a gun, taken in his pocket that gave away his own name and address. The police searched and found the Trent girl in bed and held her. Only a little of the loot from the Chanley and Ordway robberies was hidden there; but still, it was enough to implicate her."

"I suppose the police found a way to make her talk about Garrett's confederate?" asked Rankin.

"She did it without force, almost eagerly, she was so bitter as if she hated him for leading her man astray. She told his name, where he lived; where he kept the rest of the booty."

"What happened when they went after the other thief?" Rankin asked eagerly.

Mrs. Anderson hesitated and shook her head. "I'm not certain whether he was captured or not. I was only concerned with Miss Trent's story and didn't follow up later developments. You can learn about him from the Fort Wayne police."

"I'll see them shortly," the detective promised. "And Miss Trent, as she was then, served her sentence?"

"Naturally," the woman returned uncompromisingly. "After all, the crimes were committed while she was in some way; and it was shown she sold a few articles for household expenses. Besides, she had lived with Garrett for over a year, but could produce no marriage license. And she was pregnant. The court had no choice in sentencing her, since she admitted her guilt and offered no defense."

Rankin nodded. "Now with regard to her baby? What can you tell me about that?"

"There isn't much to tell, Mr. Rankin. It was a girl. And it died, as it states here, within three days."

"Young Garrett was the father, I suppose? There's not much doubt about that?"

"Yes, his name went on the birth certificate."

"And what caused the baby's death?" Rankin inquired.

"Convulsions. It was after her delivery that Ellen Trent began to suffer from headaches and needed regular treatment in the hospital. Miss Stafford could say more about that than I; she was the matron who attended her. Later she was transferred to take charge of the corridor in this building, where Ellen was a prisoner."

"Then I had better speak to her," the detective said. "If they had much contact, she should know more intimate details about her than these formal records give. Especially, if she won her confidence."

"I'll get hold of her at once; she has charge of the cells again."

The superintendent pressed a buzzer at the side of her desk, summoning to the office door a stalwrty prisoner in gray. Thru the iron bars, she ordered her to summon Miss Stafford, and the woman shuffled away.

A few minutes later the matron appeared in the corridor, and her superior pressed another button to click unlocked the door, permitting her to enter. She was surprisingly young, Rankin saw. Apparently not more than twenty-five, because of the gamin, it wasn't even put in the company safe, but kept in a suitcase behind the counter."

"I see . . . Anyhow, they pried open a window leading into a back alley at the rear of the building and set off the alarm. The guards, warned of their approach, waited for them to reach the main storeroom before they opened fire. Found out of a pair—and her sweetheart. When they caught him, they got his address and found her there with some of the loot."

The detective hitched forward. "Then the police know all about her companion?" he asked, eagerly. "Who and where he is—whether he's serving a term now?"

"Yes, his name, in the accounts was Dave Garrett; they had no previous record on him, either." The matron spoke bluntly. "And it's pretty certain what's become of him, Mr. Rankin; you see, he's been six feet under for over six years."

Rankin's features dropped in disappointment. "Dead?" he repeated blankly. "How did that happen? Are you positive of your information?"

"It was in all the papers at the time of his last robbery. It's a long story and I can give you only the main details; the rest you'll have to get from them or the police records in Indianapolis and Fort Wayne. For about a year around 1926, both towns suffered from an epidemic of robberies, to which there were no clews. In this last business the robbers were masked and used a stolen car,

The Sunday School Lesson

BY O. G. MINGLEDORFF

Lesson II.—October 13, 1935.

Subject—The Story of Jeremiah.
Jer. 1:4-19; Jer. 20:8-13.

Golden Text—For thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee, and whatsoever I shall command thee thou shalt speak. Jer. 1:7.

Practical Truth—To be a true preacher of righteousness requires courage.

Time—626 B.C. to about 580 B.C.
Places—Anathoth and Jerusalem.

Introduction.—Jeremiah, sometimes called "the weeping prophet," lived in perilous times. The kingdom of Judah was fast rushing toward Babylonian captivity when he began his prophetic ministry about 20 years before Nebuchadnezzar besieged Jerusalem in 606 B.C. He was little more than a boy at that time. It may have been some advantage to him in that he was the son of Hilkiah, who was a priest "in Anathoth in the land of Benjamin." That priest only insured him early and faithful instruction in the sacred Scriptures.

Jeremiah's heart broke with sincere grief as the time of the captivity drew near. The horror of the woes and of the captivity have not been revealed to him by the Holy Spirit, he pleaded with his people and begged them to repent. He warned them of their impending doom, and promised them deliverance if they would return to the service of Jehovah. But they turned deaf ears to him, and waxed worse and worse in their evil doings.

Josiah was in the 13th year of his reign when Jeremiah was called to his prophetic office. Five years later the Book of the Law was discovered in the temple and Josiah began his reformation. That gave the weary prophet a good start; but soon Josiah was dead, and a wicked king took the throne of Judah. Jeremiah had a hard row to hoe. He was to preach and to overthrow, for the sin by the Chaldeans nothing could stop the mad forces of the Jews. "Is my word not like as a fire? saith the Lord; and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?" Because they had so trampled on God's mercy that he withdrew his restraining influence and left them in the hands of their foes. The time had come when Judah must be taught a lesson. It took 70 years of cruel captivity to accomplish the result; but when 70 years were ended the Jews were done with idol worship. Jeremiah's task required superhuman courage—not animal courage. One may excel in the latter, but he utterly wanting in the former. One may boast of having faced and slain a lion, but he is by no so lackine in moral courage that he will not stand for social righteousness, or will not dare to oppose public evils, even when he knows public opinion is against him. Jeremiah possessed to do that.

Few men have had to face severer opposition than Jeremiah. He was Jehovah's mouthpiece to the kingdom of Judah; but the kingdom would not hear him. He abused him, and cried for his blood. He was dragged before the court to be tried for his life for the trial. The gates of the cities were used for such purposes; but in this case they sat "in the entry of the new gate of the LORD'S house."

11. Then spake the priests and the prophets.—Was there ever persecution of God's saints that was not instigated by a false clergy? It is an awful blot on the "cloth,"

Many a Friend Recommends BLACK-DRAUGHT

People who have taken Black-Draught naturally are enthusiastic when they experience the refreshing relief it has brought them. No wonder Mrs. Joe G. Roberts, of Portersville, Ala., writes: "A friend recommended Black-Draught to me a long time ago, and it has proved its worth to me. Black-Draught is good for constipation. I find that taking Black-Draught prevents the bilious headaches which I used to have." A purely vegetable medicine for relief of

This is said to be the highest price ever paid for a single book, but within a few years it may bring a great deal more. A similar bible sold for only $2,500 about 50 years ago.

When J. P. Morgan, the elder, died in 1913, his art treasures were valued at close to $100,000,000.00. His manuscripts included the original draft of "Rock of Ages" by Sir Walter Scott, Dickens' "The Christmas Carol," Thackeray's "Vanity Fair" and many works by Keats, Poe, Whittier, Longfellow and Burns. A single volume of 700 books by Mr. Morgan in 1902 cost him a million and a quarter dollars.

The late Henry Huntington left a collection for which he had paid about twenty millions. The finest collection of Shakespeare's works in existence is in the Folger library in Brooklyn.

Europeans have long deplored the shipment to this country of art treasures by Americans, but so long as they are highly prized by our country's rich they will continue to come to our shores.

The Man Who Knows

Whether the Remedy You are taking for Headaches, Neuralgia or Rheumatism Pains is SAFE is Your Doctor. Ask Him

Don't Entrust Your Own or Your Family's Well-Being to Unknown Preparations

BEFORE you take any preparation you don't know all about for the relief of headaches; or the pains of rheumatism, neuritis or neuralgia, ask your doctor what he thinks about the use of Aspirin with Genuine Bayer Aspirin.

Ask that question before the discovery of Bayer Aspirin, most so-called "pain" remedies were advertised quickly, had their day and were forgotten. Many of them had for the stomach; or, often, for the heart. And the discovery of Bayer Aspirin largely changed medical history.

Countless thousands of people all over the world have found relief in and out without ill effect, have proved that the medical findings about Bayer Aspirin are correct.

Remember this: Genuine Bayer Aspirin is the result of careful methods yet discovered for the relief of pain. Doctors have proved it safe . . . and safe for the average person to take frequently.

You can get real Bayer Aspirin at any drug store—simply by never asking for it by the name "aspirin" alone, but always saying BAYER ASPIRIN when you buy.

and a cordial welcome was extended. Mr. Dowling reports that the Messick is now having plenty of work with the A. C. L. railroad, but for quite a while after moving to the city, work was very scarce, not to be outdone, Mr. Messick and his father rented a 7-acre farm out from the city and have donations of country produce. Everything in the vegetable line. The senior Mr. Messick is still tending the farm and at Mr. Messick's assistance. The Dowlings brought home a half bushel of extra fine sweet potatoes, a lot of canned goods and other things Mr. Dowling says it was the first time he ever went to the city to receive donations of country produce. The Colliers visited at the Milford home. They found Mr. Milford in pretty bad condition and it is feared that one of his feet will have to be amputated.

DISGUSTED—While Coach Crigler was hilariously happy, probably the most disgusted individual in Elba, after the game, was Superintendent Paul Pinkston of Brantley. He said it was not a case of his big boys not being able to play football as well as Elba's much lighter players, but they simply lacked the spirit and desire to win. He said to Professor Morgan's credit, he is not coaching the Brantley team this year. He gives out the tip that Elba will go up against a team with plenty of spirit and fight when the Notes' squad is encountered on Friday of this week.

WORK STARTED—As per announcement last week in this column, work started Tuesday morning on Elba's PWA project, whereby a high school auditorium, agricultural and vocational buildings are under course of construction. The auditorium is to be one story, 52½x92½ feet. It will be equipped with a modern stage and will have a seating capacity of 600. The project also calls for remodeling, repairing and painting the high school and grammar school buildings. Enrollment in both high school and the grades has been steadily increasing and the present facilities are badly needed.

EFFICIENT FACULTY—Elba's High School faculty has again been augmented by Miss Thomas Ward of Bardwell, Ky., graduate of Center College and who took a two years' graduate work at Georgia Tech, arrived in Elba Friday night and went to time in taking up his duties as teacher of sciences. Wednesday morning Professor Wood went to Elba to add an enviable record. He has a pleasing personality and The Clipper joins the whole community in extending him a cordial welcome. Superintendent Pinkston says the acquisition of Professor Ward rounds out his faculty in fine shape and he has no hesitancy in stating that he is willing to put up his faculty against any in the State.

WORLD SERIES—The world series, baseball's annual classic, ended Monday afternoon, when Detroit's American League Tigers pushed over a tally in the 9th inning to win the 6th and deciding game, after one of the most closely contested series ever staged. Local fans can now settle down and give their undivided attention to football. Elba football fans were made happy Saturday afternoon when Auburn's hustling Tigers won over the lightly touted Tulane Wave by a score of 10 to 0. To add to the local satisfaction, Alabama's Crimson Tide, after its disappointing tie game with Howard the preceding Saturday, showed an surprising reversal of form and overwhelmed George Washington College at Washington, D. C., to the tune of 39 to 0. Alabama's all-American quarterback, Riley Smith, out with injuries in the Howard game, was at his post and made all the difference between a mediocre team and the classy football juggernaut that Crimson Tide teams are noted to be. Both Auburn and Alabama will bear watching and may possibly wind up undefeated champions. Auburn is confronted with what is commonly known as a "suicidal" schedule.

BIG PEANUT CROP—It has not rained in this section since September 19, which was over three weeks since we have had any precipitation in this vicinity. Our farmers have taken full advantage of ideal weather conditions for finishing cotton picking and housing the peanut crop, which is proving to be one of the most profitte in the country's history. The average yield per acre is exceedingly high. Whereas 1,000 pounds to the acre is considered a fair yield, many instances are being reported of nine and ten tons per 12 acres. Mr. H. C. (Pete) Talbot is telling a big 'possum story and to prove that he really caught one he brought it in and gave it to Dozier Bryan. It may not have been quite as big as the enormous 'possum Ben Brunson told Pat Flynn, Roy McCollough et al about a year or two ago, but according to Mr. Talbot, it was a monster. Dozier says it was as good as it was big.

LONG SERVICE—Mr. Pine Taylor, head ginner at the Elba Gin, is rounding out his 20th year as an employee at gins located on this lot. Mr. Taylor says he commenced 20 years ago with the Taylor Gin Company, which had two sides but only three gins to the side. About 1,000 bales was ginned the first season. Mr. Taylor considered an average season's ginning. This seems comparatively small when compared with the two million bale cotton output this season of around 5,000 bales. At that time the Taylor gin was Elba's only one. Mr. Taylor, in thinking back over the years he has been in the ginning business, says he is reminded of what his uncle once said to his aunt: "You have been with me so long you seem just like one of the family." That's the way Pine feels about the Elba Gin.

LONGEVITY—When "Uncle" Joe Young heard that Mr. F. S. Young was claiming the greatest combined ages of any three brothers in this section, Mr. Young got to thinking about his own brothers and sisters. He reports the following names and their ages all living: Mrs. Della Wise, 83; W. G. Young, 80; J. C. Young, 77; Mrs. Jennie English, 75; J. L. Young, 72; S. F. Young, 70; making a combined age of 457 years for the six youngsters. Who can beat either the Tucker or Young family records for longevity.

Cotton Planters To Back Acreage Reduction Plans Of AAA For Year 1936

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Oct. 11—Southern cotton planters were represented by witnesses at the Agricultural Adjustment Administration hearing here Friday as favoring a continuation of the government's acreage reduction program in 1936.

With Cully A. Cobb, head of the cotton section of the AAA, an attentive listener, agricultural extension workers, cotton planters and officials of the American Farm Bureau Federation gave hearty endorsement to the government's program in behalf of agriculture.

However, representatives of the Southern Tenant Farmers Union, an organization of sharecroppers of Eastern Arkansas, appeared to make a plea in behalf of the tenant farmers of the South.

Walter Moskop, of Trumann, Ark., a member of the union's executive committee, said he would ask that sharecroppers "be given one-half of the benefit payments and other tenants their proportionate share," and that all payments "be made direct to the individuals and not through landowners."

Mosktop said he represented 15,000 sharecroppers, "the forgotten men of this nation today," he declared. ALJ-66-SA2. Memphis, Tennessee. 11pd.

Thad Snow, Charleston, Mo., Missouri Farm Bureau Federation representative, and Charles O. Henry, general manager of the Mid-South Cotton Growers Association, Memphis, urged continuance of the government's adjustment policies.

Robert K. McConnaughey, Department of Agriculture attorney, is presiding at the meeting.

PRIVILEGE LICENSE BUYERS HAVE ONLY SHORT TIME LEFT

Although state and county privilege licenses have been on the market since the first day of October, there are worlds of unbold persons in the county who have not yet purchased these licenses, according to attaches at the probate office.

The law for buying privilege licenses will be out on October 31, just two weeks from today, and after that time there will be a penalty and citation fees. All persons liable for license should attend to this matter at once. Don't wait until the last day, as there will be a rush at that time and somebody may be left out.

Automobile license tags and drivers' licenses are going at a rapid rate, and automobile owners are urged to come in at the very earliest possible time and attend to these matters. Although the 1936 license tags will not be out until November 14, motorists are urged to get tags before that date.

The tax assessor, tax collector and clerks in the probate judge's office, all of whom have duties to perform in the issuance of tags, are urging all persons to buy their license plates just as soon as possible. It will be a great help to them if they will attend to this matter before the last day.

FROM MR. SPURLIN

October 12, 1935.

Dear Editor and Readers:

Am at home and I wonder if I have forgotten you. I wrote last. I have been careless part of the time and part not able to write. Two weeks I could not roll my chair. The same trouble, sacroiliac.

Came back Monday, the 7th, from an eight weeks visit in Florida, where the people are genuine. Yes thank you, I tried one small fish. It always is little. Those people like them so much they think you are cranky or foolish if you don't eat gobber. The farmers had the best crops I ever saw there. They tried more to make something. Of course their farms are small. Some of the people live by scuffling for a living. These stumps are used for producing tar. But almost everybody seems to be on the move and are there like the people say they are here. You cannot persuade or hire one of them to help you do a thing. I would consider it a dispensation if I were able to work and could get work to let the government feed and clothe me. May be getting on some of my friends' toes; if so, am sorry, but I feel this way about it. There are so many things about the relief I do not understand. Am told it will not help those who are disable to work but those who are able-bodied. This may be right, but if I were helping people I would help those first least able to help themselves. If I were able to my way of thinking is encouraging idleness with the able-bodied. And those that will not work ought to be sent to Russia, where they are forced to work.

Am truly sorry to learn of the death of Wayne Page and Mark Hartley. It is so sad. Their folks have my deepest sympathy.

Farmers are almost through harvesting their crops. Like picking peanuts, gathering potatoes and working up the cane. I saw a letter in The Montgomery Advertiser written by Dr. C. A. Cates suggesting a plan for the cotton farmers that I think would be better to sell than the government. It is something like this: Let each farmer plant about 50 per centage of his harvested crop in cotton and give each the same amount of lint per acre. This would not discriminate against some in favor of others as the present plan does.

I think a rain would be appreciated by most everybody now. Some have not sown turnip seed and some that did, the dry weather has killed. Will hush.

LONNIE SPURLIN.

Six-year-old Tommy has a vivid imagination. ELBIAN, PASSES EARLY WEDNESDAY AFTER LONG ILLNESS

Mr. Olin S. Winston, for many years one of Elba's most highly esteemed citizens, passed away at his home in West Elba early Wednesday morning after an illness extending over a period of several years. For several weeks his condition had been such that little or no hope had been held for his recovery. He had been suffering from a heart disease and other troubles.

Mr. Winston was born in Lauderdale County near Opelika and was 63 years of age. He attended school at Auburn and in early manhood moved to Luverne, where he was connected with the late W. B. Perdue in the operation of a brick and grist mill. About forty years ago he moved to Elba and maintained his connection with Mr. Perdue for a long period of years, in the operation of the brick manufacturing and building supply business For several years he was employed by the City of Elba as superintendent of the water works system, and also served as a member of the city council from his ward.

Several years ago Mr. Winston was married to Miss Daisy Smith, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Smith, who, together with the following children, survive him: Harris Winston of the U. S. Navy, now at home on furlough, but who will be stationed in California; Olin Winston, Jr., and Roger Winston, both of Elba. He also leaves two brothers: P. J. Winston of Opp and Fred Winston of Gainesville, Fla.; four sisters: Miss Xeva Winston of Auburn, Mrs. Cathleen Lett of Selma, Mrs. John Smith of Opelika and Mrs. Odie Anderson of Hueytown, Ala.

According to announcement made Wednesday afternoon, just as The Clipper was going to press, funeral services will be held at the home this (Thursday) afternoon at 2:00 o'clock. Interment will be in Evergreen Cemetery, with Elba Funeral Home in charge of funeral arrangements.

About People and Things

By C. B. McDowell

QUANDARY—"Pat" Horn is in a quandary—don't know what is best to do. Since losing his faithful watchdog, possums have been playing havoc with his hen roost. He has been unsuccessful in getting another dog, but C. Y. Marlow, Harris Mayhew, Edwin Jones, a new traffic light is a great aid in directing traffic at one of the most congested and heretofore dangerous street intersections in this part of Alabama.

ONLY 200 FISH—A carload of fish, mostly catfish, were distributed fasumen composed of Messrs. W. A. Prescott, J. D. Whitaker, H. A. Martin, D. F. Peacock and Roy Devane are somewhat "disgustapated" over a fishing trip they took Tuesday, down near Point Washington. Among other things that failed to materialize for each "possum they slay." Mr. Horn says he told them that he was intending to celebrate his birthday anniversary on Wednesday of this week with a chicken supper and that he would give each of the varmint killers a chicken leg. But nothing doing! They held out for a whole quarter for each 'possum and Mr. Horn says he is unable to decide which would be more economical—to pay off or let the 'possums have the chickens.

COTTON AND MULES—Several weeks ago, I mentioned in this column the unusually fine mules belonging to Mr. Welcome Wyrosick, residing on one of the Dr. Braswell farms, west of Basin. Mr. Wyrosick was in Elba Monday and said he appreciated what I said about his mules, but he is afraid his neighbors will think he devotes too much of his time to his mules, to the detriment of his cotton crop. Such is far from the truth. He has picked and ginned 215 bales of cotton from 22 acres, and weighed 500 pounds to the bale, his crop averaged considerably over a bale to the acre, as all of the bales weighed well over 500 pounds. We'll have to admit that Mr. Wyrosick is an expert cotton grower as well as a wonderful groomer of mules.

WILL SEE AGAIN—His numerous friends in this community will rejoice to know that Mr. J. W. Talley, who has been entirely blind for the past several months, will regain his sight. He is recovering from an operation in a Dothan hospital, where cataracts were removed from his eyes. Late reports from the hospital state that he is recovering nicely.

CITIFIED—Elba has gotten in on New Brockton's class. Last Wednesday a modern three-globe traffic light was installed at the dangerous Miller garage corner. For the past several months New Brockton has boasted of having the only traffic light in Coffee County. But now Elba has gone her neighbor one better by installing a three-globe light—red, yellow and green—whereas New Brockton's has only a two-globe light—red and green. Forest Talbot is now one-up on his brother-in-law, Harris Mayhew. Elba's new traffic light is a great aid in directing traffic at one of the most congested and heretofore dangerous street intersections in this part of Alabama.
